Character Description

Thaddeus Elway is a tall, hollow-faced man with a pointed jaw and contemplative features. He almost never smiles, which is good because even his smirks lend him the look of a villain. Bereft of any hair save a short and narrow mohawk, Thaddeus carries nearly as many visible scars upon his head and face as he does cybernetic enhancements. That is to say, most of his organs are not made of carbon. His arms and shoulders are advanced prosthetics, his legs from the knees down are metal simulacrum stuffed into boots, and his spinal column has firmware (which is in need of an update). This cyber-enhancement seems to have seeped into Thad's personality, as well. He is a cool and calculating person who's always several steps ahead of everyone nearby. His meticulous planning often results in fast results when well-executed, and his advice is valued by his superiors when asked for, though never volunteered. Thaddeus is a respectful individual, if a bit cold, and never offers suggestions when he isn't asked for them. He is a strictly disciplined individual when on-the-job and regards the actions of his superiors to be better-informed decisions even when he knows better from the power of logic alone. Off-the-job, there are frightening rumors surrounding him. Nothing is proven, but Thaddeus is a minor celebrity in the Corps rumor mill for being both somewhat of a vigilante and possessing an extremely adventurous sexuality.

History and Relationship Notes

Sergeant Elway has been a die-hard supporter of the Green Faction for as long as he's been old enough to support things. From a political gangster on the streets during the civil war to an honest soldier after the succession; the story of Thaddeus' rise through the ranks has been storied. Over the years he's acquired a bevy of strange tastes and ideas, none of which has clouded his professional outlook. While he's served as a trainer of men during the most recent war with the NMX, his current assignment is as the personal assistant to Commandant Killroyal Black.
