History

Family

Father: John Griffin. Deceased

Mother: Marie Schmidth. Unemployed

Pre-RP

Born in Roger Wilco city on the Planet Nepleslia in YE 15 by his mother, Marie Schmidth, which was a employed as waitress in one of those restaurants in Hallowed Grounds, not without a help of John Griffin, which was a police officer appointed for a foot patrol around Urban Rezone of city for a rest of his life because of doing few things from "not-to-do-list" while on duty.

Succeeded at being cute child, suffering the drunk father's harassments, entertaining himself by family scenes often occurring between his parents and getting used to distant screams of agony somewhere in most dark alleys of hood. Until YE 22 when grew up enough to be kicked out to the school from nice and calm place to dwell and waste remains of mother's wage. John was kicked out from job 2 years before for that moment.

Three years ago, right after Tony just started to understand a meaning of all those math riddles, something not quite understandable for him happened with a people and things around. Things gain a nasty habit of exploding, falling apart and do other kind of nasty destruction stuff, while adults decided to do a really wide spectra of things which included: screaming, running, fighting with each other, coincidently robbing some store or some other adult. Most smart adults remained silent and just sat tight to decide if they really want to fight for their homeland or not, leaving to the front line in case of positive decision or joining the madness on the streets, using the opportunity to become a few wallets richer in case of negative decision. But those were most smart adults, while all other decided to act like shit. Perhaps, SMX invasion could do something with it, but in a middle of all this chaos it was quite difficult to find out for a 10 year old boy. As a matter of fact, Tony was much more interesting in survival first and asking questions later.

For some really nasty and long time a lot of interesting and not really things happened, but in total it gave a pretty much knowledge for a Tony. Much more than any school can give to a young and thriving boy. First of all, his father was unlucky enough to catch a knife with his stomach. Our hero failed to witness his last words just because he was running away from some random molester somewhere in another part of town. Meanwhile his mother disappeared and Tony was left all to himself in this funny and mad world. Not for long though. He was quickly adopted by his own kind - the other kids who were lead by a pretty smart guy named Joe, but much more famous around those places as "Rat".

Maybe leader's name was a reason why they decided to call themselves "Street rats". Or maybe the sewers, where they used to live (and which just happened to be a decent bombproof shelter) could do something with its name. Or it may be even the last words of their clients, which they wheezed out of their mouth with a some amount of blood: "You.. little.. rat", while observing a little cute (but dirty and skinny) creature wielding a knife. Knife, eventually, was stuck in client's chest at this moment. Anyway, it was a more or less organised group of children from five to eighteen years old and who decided that job is not vital for survival when there are so many stuff you can take away without permission with or without force.

When things settled down, "rats" came out for a surface and occupied one of the buildings as their headquarters. Lots of deaths caused a lot of good jobs to be taken away, but easy way is a good way, is not it?

Once on surface, Street Rats continued what they can do best - chaotic assaults on people with borrowing their belongings. This tactic quickly proved to be not effective in a post-war time and gang was forced to use a much more subtle approach. Pick-pocketing became main profit gainer while random assaults on bystanders were declared waste of time. Instead of people rats targeted warehouses and stores. Investigate the spot, find a good time to break in, do it, waste the guard or guards, grab and run.

Time passes. Notoriety of Rats raises, fresh blood flows in a gang. Finally they became a dominating gang in a hood. Some people say that that happened not without help of some much more powerful organisation. Some people say that they robbed military for weaponry. But anyway, when rats managed to put their hands on handguns and even most green recruits were equipped with those - gang war ended quite fast.

But anything good ends soon or later. That's a brief and dry output:

- Joe "Rat" London. Leader of gang. Arrested and imprisoned for multiple violations of law at YE 28. Fell twice on shank two months later. Deceased.
- Bob "Strike" Simons. Right hand of Joe London. Shot in chest twice during Civil War. Deceased.
- Cliff "Beagle" Battle. Leader of red pack. Shot in head by a guard of warehouse. Deceased.
- Ben Scott, Bella Utterback, Silas Wade. Members of red pack. Arrested and imprisoned. Currently released, whereabouts unknown.
- Tony "Yehat" Griffin. Member of red pack. Fled from the town after Joe's arrest.
- Mario "Gabe" Mancera. Leader of black pack. Committed suicide.
- Laura Schell, Ben Geise, Terrance Odimgbe, Isabel Terrell, Greg Michaux, Leon Mintah. Members of black pack. Killed in conflict with rival gang. All deceased.
- Arthur "Acle" Miller. Storyteller. The only adult in the gang. Killed by police officer due to police brutality. Deceased.

About two hundred of rats leaved the gang with London's arrest. Rest members known to be killed during the Civil war or fled from gang.

Anyway, Tony fled from Roger Wilco city at YE 28 and hitch-hiked to the Funky City, where attempted to get a job and stay out of trouble. Failed at this task hardly. No one was actually interested in hiring 13 years old boy and trouble found him itself at YE 29. It was a Civil War. People started to act like shit once again. And here story repeats: Tony instinctively chosen sewers as home and came up to a surface only to hunt. The only difference that he attempted to stay out of trouble this time and attempted to borrow things without blood.

Year later, when greens finally took control of the situation, a lots of low-class jobs needed to be filled with someone. Tony took this opportunity and started to work at warehouse. Lifting things, pulling things around, respond to "hey-you-come-over-here" shouts from chief - that kind of job. Salary was enough to buy something to drink with fellas and pay for the rent. And if Tony needed some extra cash he could always fetch something from the warehouse to people on streets. That was a slow and boring (but stable and without surprises) life, boredom of which was interrupted sometimes by whores or beating up anyone who looks not like everyone.

Tony knew that he will never find a decent job and if he will continue to live such kind of life - he will be just arrested or killed. Or both. Anyway, he managed to survive until he became old enough to join the marines. Currently, he passed the training successfully and dwells peacefully at Funky City garrison, awaiting for a real job.
