Pre-RP

Born to a forest ranger and company executive, Iku grew up among the towering trees of Tami. Often, in her childhood, she would go on trips through the expansive forests with her father to learn about all nature and the animals within it had to offer. Her mother would spoil her left and right with gifts, and love. Whenever she was bored, she could always find a playmate in her sister, who was never shy and never afraid to try new things. Iku lived a loving, comfortable life with her family in her early childhood, and rarely knew hardship because of it.

However, this was not to last as one early trip home from school had Ginga, Iku's sister, and Iku herself catching their ever-loving mother on the couch with another man. Despite being bribed and coaxed into keeping the discovery a secret, Ginga had become unable to contain herself with her father. When he found out, the house fell apart and the world Iku had come to cherish was slowly unraveling into an unfamiliar hell. In futile attempts to “work through it”, Iku's parents tried to put it past them, but all it led to was screaming arguments and a constant, cold reminder that the innocence of the family had been lost. Eventually the entire debacle ended in divorce, with Gira getting custody of the children.

The whole thing had been torturous for Ginga, who had thought to have harmlessly exposed a secret, but instead had believed she'd torn the family apart all on her own. One night, without saying a word to anyone, and only a tearful glance to her sister, she disappeared into the forest. Only months later was she found dead, her body broken, and feasted away at the base of a waterfall.

Months later, after constant grief, Iku's father remarried. Despite the shattered hole in her heart, the young girl actually hoped to find something in her new mother, brother, and sister. Yet, to her surprise, she found herself an outcast in the home, a terrible reminder to her father and an unwelcome guest to his new family. Gone were the days of happiness glee, and here had come a life of depression and a constant search for solace.

That solace did not come until Iku had become old enough to join the Grand Star Army. With little word to anyone, she flew away into the ranks of the illustrious military. Among the military she found a life she could lose herself in, with easy care, easy pay, and easy pleasure. Fighting for Yamatai was a mix of pleasures she couldn't separate, and she found joy in everything and everyone she did. Quickly, she began to distinguish herself across as a capable of powered armor pilot and infantry woman, with a suitable precision with weaponry that did not go unnoticed by her superiors.

It was not until the Battle of Taiie that the truest horrors of war began to creep into her reality. Despite being able to enjoy several successes with a few mild failures, nothing was more jarring than the Battle of Taiie. Witnessing the Star Exploder destroy the system gave hesitation to what Iku truly enjoyed of war, but gave a certain importance to the fight that she had been missing. Yet, Iku's station gave her easy access to see the true colors of Yamatai. Watching good, imperial citizens suffer, and watching the destruction of the of the planet of pacifist nation shook every value she had spent the last several years building.

When the Fifth Expeditionary Fleet broke from Yamatai to form the United Outer Colonies, Kobayashi went with them, becoming a Peacekeeper. The further cruelties of the Star Army only affirmed her beliefs and kept her work fulfilling. Yet, not even this was to last as the UOC fell under the axe of the Mishhu. And soon, despite everything she worked for, everything once again fell apart, and Kobayashi found herself under firm, unflinching embrace of the one organization she sought to be free from.

Iku's first assignments had mostly been scouting and gathering intelligence within the colonies still remaining in form UOC territory. Though, she was reassigned, soon after its capture, to Leo Star Fortress.
